

MOTO 911 PAIN-RELIEVING SPRAY

Some dude at the SurferCross event handed me this bottle right before I crashed. Naturally, running my head into the ground gave me a very sore neck, and the bottle was right there saying, "Pain relief." So I gave it a try. It sprayed right on, and the cooling sensation that immediately occurred felt like Bengay or Icy Hot on steroids. I was convinced this stuff worked: In about two minutes, my neck was less sore and a lot less tight. In fact, after application the spray continued to work for about 45 minutes. I thought the test was over.

Well, the next day my sore neck came back, so I gave it a spray and got the same relief and improvement. But I remembered being told by the rep (dude) that after 45 minutes to an hour, a second application works wonders. He was right. It was even more effective than the first one in the amount of pain-killing penetration I felt. A third application a few hours later revived the effects. It was all I needed to get me through the day in relative comfort.

I've since used the spray on my wrists, ankles and knees when the need arises and have felt similar results, especially on the second application, making it much more comfortable to ride when I'm sore

Now, the label does mention the spray helps prevent arm-pump, so I enlisted my brother, who gets the worst arm-pump known to man. He is a two-lap wonder. Wanting to add a few laps to his rides, he solicited my help for a cure. He laughed as we sprayed Moto 911 on and said with skepticism, "It's just like Bengay!" But after staying out for a few extra laps (at least four), he came back and inquired, "What is that stuff, it really works! Where can I get some?"

Moto 911 is a drug and you should use as directed (FDA-approved drug facts and instructions are included). It will also clear out a small room with its strong-smelling aroma—think methanol. I now keep Moto 911 in my truck and motor home and use it regularly. It costs $6.95 for a 1-ounce bottle and $18.95 for 4 ounces, and it seems to be going a long way. My original 1-ounce bottle is empty after three months. It works as advertised and is especially convenient in spray form.
